

Address of the Member Organizations of the Georgian National Platform of Eastern Partnership Civil Society Forum to the Parliament of Georgia

Unfortunately, turns out that reaching the consensus is impossible within the frames of constitutional discussions on the issues important for institutional democracy, among which are the competencies of the leader of the state and election to the office.

Many parliamentary republics have both, the principle of indirectly electing a president, which is offered by the present constitutional project, as well as, the constitutional principle of directly electing a president. The countries choose appropriate procedure based on their needs, historical experience or political context.

We, the Member Organizations of the Georgian National Platform of Eastern Partnership Civil Society Forum believe that the proposed procedure for forming electoral college may strongly precondition the dependency of the President of Georgia on specific political subjects. Furthermore, the proposed parliamentary election model in the constitutional project ensure that one political force dominates everyone else, which gives high probability to the threat that the indirectly elected President of Georgia is biased. Simultaneously, we would like to note, that the competencies of the President of Georgia, despite current limitations, is highly diversified, requires high level of legitimization and it remains important that Georgia has a nonpartisan leader of the state.

For Georgian state, it is crucial that institutions are enhanced, additional checks and balances are established for the purposes of excluding the possibility of one political force dominating on every field of social and political life, for developing political pluralism and pluralistic democracy. This is only achieved through diverse governing institutions, that are formed through elections.

Given all of the above mentioned, we the signatory organizations believe that it will be appropriate if the pursuit of weakening the competencies of the President of Georgia and amending how the President is elected are abandoned and if the leader of the state is elected in universal, equal and direct suffrage.
